Security Partnership Day

What is Public-Private Partnership Day?

The Annual Public Law Enforcement—Private Security Partnership Day (Public-Private Partnership Day) is a years-long collaborative effort between ASIS, the IACP, and the NSA. The mission of Public-Private Partnership Day is to foster and support the development of strong, robust, and enduring partnerships between the public safety community and the private security profession.

When is Public-Private Partnership Day?

The fourth Thursday of April every year has been designated as Public-Private Partnership Day. The inaugural Public-Private Partnership Day will occur on Thursday, April 25, 2024.

Public-Private Partnership History

- The existence of partnerships between public law enforcement and private security go back many decades.
- While public-private partnerships were primarily informal prior to the 1980's, many partnerships became more formal in recent years.
- There are many highly-effective public law enforcement and private security partnerships that are still informal.

Public-Private Partnership History

- Individual members that form committees and councils of partner organizations have been collaborating for many years in an effort to enhance public law enforcement and private security partnerships.
- This long-term collaboration has resulted in memorandums of understanding (MOUs) being executed between ASIS and their law enforcement partner organizations thus formalizing partnerships between the organizations.

- U.S. Department of Homeland Security

The Genesis of Public-Private Partnership Day

A motion was approved by the LELC on April 14, 2021:

"To further increase cooperation and collaboration between the security profession and the law enforcement community, the ASIS Law Enforcement Liaison Community hereby votes to approve a motion to move forward with operationalizing the initiative of establishing a global Public Safety / Private Security Day or "P3 Day." The objective of creating such an event when the public safety community and the private security community can plan a joint annual event to recognize the strong need for robust public safety / private security partnerships."

The Significance of Public-Private Partnership Day

Public-Private Partnership Day formalizes and celebrates public safety-private security partnerships and officially recognizes the many benefits of partnerships.

ASIS Support at the Chapter Level is CRITICAL

- Unlike ASIS, neither the IACP nor the NSA have local chapters
- Public-Private Partnership Day depends on local ASIS chapter leaders reaching out to their local LE partners
- Having a motivated Law Enforcement Committee Chair is essential to success

Possible Public-Private Partnership Day Activities

- Formal noon or dinner banquet
- Informal social get-together
- Joint meeting to discuss partnership opportunities
- Gubernatorial Proclamation signing

Conclusion

Public-Private Partnership Day will help take collaboration between the public safety community and the private security profession to a new level that will result in far better protection for people, property and information.
